

Join the U.S. Industry Delegation to the IAEA 57th General Conference

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) is an international organization with 151 member countries. Their mission is to promote the development of safe, secure, and peaceful nuclear technologies. Every year the agency holds a General Conference, inviting the world's leading nuclear policymakers and experts to Vienna for a week of meetings, presentations and networking.

Take advantage of this unique opportunity

For the sixth consecutive year, the U.S. Industry Program at the International Atomic Energy Agency's annual General Conference in Vienna, Austria, will open the door for qualified U.S. companies to meet and engage with energy policymakers from around the world, gain first-hand information from U.S. government officials about progress on regulatory, technology and standards issues that are essential to international business, and showcase U.S. technology to the hundreds of policymakers, IAEA professional staff, scientists and experts who attend this event.

This year's program will take place September 15-18, 2013, and will include exclusive networking events, roundtable meetings with leading U.S. officials, specially arranged meetings with policymakers from best prospect markets, a USA exhibit, and access to a catered America Lounge. Marketing partnerships are available.
